

Forms of assessment for upcoming exams – spring 2020

Fakultet for informasjonsteknologi og elektroteknikk 16.03.2020 By Kai Torgeir Dragland

Dear student:

Due to the situation with the corona virus, alternative forms of assessment for upcoming exams are now being established. This means that we will change from written school exams to home exams, or other form of assessment that doesn't require physical attendance. Decisions will be made on an ongoing basis regarding the aforementioned. Unfortunately, you might feel that you will receive information at different times in relation to the various exams for which you are registered.

We know that home exams can be challenging. If, for various reasons, you are unable to complete the home exam, you will be able to apply for valid absence. In this way, you will be able to postpone your exam. Information about changed deadlines and where to send this application will be provided at a later time.

The board of NTNU has decided that students may be given the opportunity to take an assessment, even if compulsory activities are not approved. Some compulsory activities simply cannot be carried out at this time. Due to the situation with the corona virus, some students may also have faced challenges with compulsory work requirements already. In practice, this means that the subject teacher/course coordinator will be able to approve compulsory work requirements, although you haven't completed your planned compulsory work requirements. We ask students who have questions to check the course's Blackboards page and, if necessary, contact your teacher/course leader directly.

We encourage you to keep informed through on Innsida and Blackboard.

Vegard Rønning
Head of Academic Administration
IE Faculty

Updated: 14.41 16.03.2020